A. ث ^ث. (A. thū). vulg. ^{ثو}. The fifth letter of the Ottoman Turkish, as of the Persian, but the fourth of the Arabic alphabet. It is distinguished from other letters of similar form by the name, the three-dotted sa (ثلاثه). From its place in the ايمد series, it is also named sā'i sakhas (تساخت). It is sounded like s, and occurs in words of Arabic origin only. When this letter is the first radical of a triliteral root, Arabic grammar permits the eighth derivative form (افعال), to be modified in three different ways, namely: it may be formed regularly; as نلت, اتلات, نلل; or, the radical ت and the servile ت may coalesce into ت under a teshdid, or sometimes into a ت under a teshdid; thus, اتل issīlāt, from نأل; اتخان issikhān, from نخان; اتغار ittīgār, from تغر, etc.

The letter ث, in the ايمد series, holds the twenty third place, and its value in a chronogram is 500.

ج

A. ج jīm. The sixth letter of the Ottoman Turkish, but the fifth of the Arabic alphabet. This letter, to distinguish it from the three-dotted Persian ج, is also designated جيم عربي. It always has the sound of the English "J." In words adopted into Arabic from the Persian, this letter sometimes replaces the final vowel ا of the original; as, A. جَمْعَة jām'at for P. جَمْعَة jām'at, it also replaces the soft Persian ك; as, جَمْعَة jām'at for جَمْعَة jām'at.

Being the third letter of the objed (بجد) series, it represents the number 3. In astronomical tables in numbering the members of a series, its truncated form ج, without a dot, is used; this form distinguishes the letter from ح (8). The letter خ (600), is never required for these purposes.

ح, or its truncated form ج, without a dot, stands, in dates of documents, for the name of the Arabian month jemazi-l-akhir (جاني الاخر). In some copies of the Qur'an, it is placed to indicate where a short pause is permissible, and then represents the word جاز.

ا. ح hā The sixth letter of the Arabic, but eighth of the Turkish and Persian alphabets; never used in words of true Persian origin, and seldom, if ever, correctly, in words of Turkish origin. It is found, however, occasionally so used interchangeably with خ in hard-vowelled Turkish and foreign terms, or with • in soft-voweled words. Its power is that of a strong and hard, but pure aspirate, as in احمد ahmed, احمد ahmed, etc. Care should be taken to sound the aspirate fully, whether it occurs as initial, medial or final, avoiding at the same time the error of pronouncing this letter like خ (the Greek χ).

This letter represents the number 8; in astronomical tables, and in the members of a series, it is left entire, for distinction from the truncated ح (ح). In dates of letters and documents ح (really an undotted ح), represents the month الجاني الآخر. (See ح)

The name of this letter, when written in full, is حاي محمد nūyī muḥmēd, the undotted ح.

The ح is the first of the hard class of consonants, and requires the vowels that follow it in a syllable to be hard nā. nū or nā. nī or nī. nū or nū; also, that the vowel of an initial preceding it in a syllable shall be pronounced a or u. though the initial kesre vowel is left soft, as in احسان iḥsān. احرام iḥrām. etc.

A. ح khā. vulg. khī. The seventh letter of the Arabic, but ninth of the Turkish and Persian alphabets. In chronograms it represents the number 600. Its sound is that of the German ch in doch, and of the Greek z in zōs.

It is one of the class of hard letters, requiring, when moved in a syllable, a hard vowel to follow it. In Constantinople the pronunciation of this letter is softened, so as to resemble that of the letter ح, or even ه; but in the mouth of provincials, Persians, and Arabs, the guttural sound is very harsh to western ears. In transliteration this letter is represented by kh.

Some Turkish words now generally written and pronounced with ح, are occasionally, written and pronounced with خ; as, بشقه bāshkhā, for بشقه bāshqā, etc. The final ق and ك of the first person plural of certain tenses of verbs are also, in the pronunciation of the Turcomans of Asia Minor, changed into ح; as, كیدخ gidākh.

A. د ādī, vulg. ādī. The tenth letter of the Turkish and Persian alphabets, and the eighth of the Arabian letters; its phonetic value is that of the letter d. Its numerical value is four. To distinguish it from the letter ذ the letter د is called دال موله the neglected or undotted د, or دال امجد the د of the word امجد.

This letter, like a few others, cannot be joined, in writing, to the letter which follows it, though it may be joined to a preceding letter.

In a few Arabic derived words of the eighth form (افعال), when the initial root letter is د, ذ, or ز, the formative ت is changed into د, and this is made to coalesce with the initial radical in a letter د reduplicated in pronunciation; (in the case of initial ذ or ز, the reduplicated letter is sometimes ذ or ز, and sometimes the letters are written apart as pronounced) as ادعا (īdā'ā) for ادعا (īdā'ā), ادكار (īzdīkyār) for ادكار (īzdīkyār), and ازدواج (īzdīvāj) for ازدواج (īzdīvāj).

In Turkish words, the letter د is found occasionally where otherwise a ت or ا ط is used, as, دابولفه or تابولفه, etc. An originally quiescent final ت also may change into د which becomes movent; as, قورت a wolf, قوردك of a wolf, etc. Also in verbs; as, ايت do thou, ايدير do ye, ايدر he does, he will do. In the word ذرت four, we have دردك of four, etc., but this rule of final quiescent ت changing into د is not generally applied to monosyllables; e. g., آت a horse, آك of a horse, etc. Where the medial remains quiescent it does not change into د, as, قورده in a ḡār (ḡamān), wār (wāfīz). machine. (ḡir). ī (qīrāt), rūde (rūdī). — n nasal.

wolf, فورتدن from a wolf; ایتدی he did, etc.

Grammatically, the letter د fills three or four important functions in Turkish verbs. As an element of the causative syllable در (air. air. dūr. dūr.) it helps to form the major class of causative verbs, as: یازدر make or let (it) be written, سورد make or let (it) to be driven away or rubbed in; etc. When movent with ösere, and followed or not by a vowel ی, it forms the perfect tense of the verb; and, followed by ق or ك, it forms the perfect active and perfect passive participles, as well as the perfect verbal noun; thus: یازدی he wrote; یازدی who has written, which was written; the past action of writing. When movent with üstün, and followed by a vowel ی, it forms the locative suffix or preposition (or post-position) ده (āh. āh.) in or at; as: اوده in the house, at home. Again, movent with üstün, but followed by ن, it forms the ablative suffix دن from, than; as: بدن etc. The letter د is reduplicated in pronunciation instead of the ج of an Arabic definite article preceding it; thus الدعا āh-āh. dā.

ر

A. ر rā, vulg. رō. rī. The twelfth letter of the Turkish and Persian alphabets, the tenth of the Arabic. Its phonetic value is that of the letter r distinctly pronounced.

The full name of the letter is راء, in distinction from the letter ز. It is also termed راء قرشت (the ر of the word قرشت in the ايمد formula).

In chronograms it has the numeral value of 200. It does not join to a succeeding letter. It is one of the letters reduplicated in pronunciation when preceded by the Arabic definite article; as الرحمن or-rūhmān.

In the dates of letters, the letter ر represents the month Rebi u'l akhīr ربيع الاخر. It also represents, sometimes, the words ر (the moon) and ر (the day).

The ر represents the ز in almanacs and mathematical tables, etc., and thus stands for the numeral 7; as: ر 17. It sometimes represents Saturday, as the seventh day, and Scorpio, as the seventh sign of the Zodiac.

The letter ر is one of the mystical letters placed at the head of certain chapters of the Qur'an, singly or in combination and read by their names in full.

From the case with which it is pronounced, the letter ر has been termed the ass of the poets (حمار الشعرا).

In a few words, the ر is changed into ل in the vernacular of the common people; as رادر birādār, vulg. bilādār.

In Turkish Grammar, the letter ر ends the third person singular of the aorist tense indicative, and the active aorist participle of all affirmative verbs by being added to the root of the verb; as, امرور qīrār, كيدر gīdār, ارير ōrīr, اسير isīrīr, اوقور ōqūr, etc. It also forms or helps to form the causative verbs by being suffixed to the root of the simple verb. Generally, in this case, the causative syllable added is ر ār, ār; as, اندر īndār, ōndār; قيدر qīrdār; which becomes ūr, or ūr, by assimilation; as, اوردور wūrdūr, قودور qōdūr, etc. But in a few cases the causative form is made by the insertion of a letter ر alone; as, بکور or بکر gōchīr, gōchūr.

A. راء rā. Abbreviation for ربيع الاول rōbī'ū'l-āvvāl, the third month of the lunar year.

P. راء rā, prep. A suffix sometimes used to mark an accusative or oblique case.

A. راء rā, vulg. رō. rī. s. The letter ر. راء قرشت The letter ر of the word قرشت in the ايمد formula. راء The undotted ر.

A. ریفان rō'īa. a. (fem. رؤساء) Chief, principal. ریفان الأعضاء The principal organs of the body.

ا. ز zā. vulg. zō. In Turkish and Persian the thirteenth, and in Arabic, the eleventh letter of the alphabet. Its phonetic value is z. Its full name is زاء مجهم zā'ī mu'jammā; the dotted ز. It is also termed زاهوز the z of the word هوز (in the ايجد formula).

It has the numerical value of 7.

In writing, the letter ز never joins the succeeding letter, and it is reduplicated in pronunciation instead of pronouncing the J of an Arabic definite article preceding it.

Being pronounced in Turkish nearly in the same manner with the letters ض and ظ, the letter ز is used at times by careless writers instead of those letters; or, a letter ظ is sometimes used instead of ز; as, زابط for ضابط, and زاغوس for ظغوس, etc.

In Turkish grammar, the letter ز performs several important functions.

By being added to the ordinary diminutive termination of substantives, it forms the diminutive of coaxing affection, thus: آدجق a little man, آدجقر a darling little man, etc.

In personal pronouns the letter ز forms the plural of the first, and of the second person, by substitution in the place of the termination of the singular, thus: بن I, z we; من thou, z you.

As a suffixed possessive pronoun the letter ز forms the plural of the first and of the second person, thus: آدم my man, آدمز our man, آدمك thy man, آدكز your man, etc.

In verbs the letter ز terminates in some tenses the first, and in all tenses the second person plural; as, باقورز, baqor-z, etc.

In negative and impotential verbs, the letter ز also forms the third person singular of the aorist indicative, and the aorist active participle, thus: باقر, baqr; it is consequently found in all the persons, singular and plural, of the aorist and past tenses of those verbs.

When a letter ز is the initial of an Arabic trilateral root that passes into the form افعال, the servile ت of the form is changed into a د: thus: زجر zajr. مزدجر mūzdejir, etc.

In Persian derivation, a letter خ in a passive participle becomes ز in the active and in the verbal noun; as, burnt, سوز that burns, سوزش an act of burning.

س

A. سین sín. The fifteenth letter of the Turkish and Persian alphabets, and twelfth of the Arabic. Its unvarying phonetic value is that of the letter s, as in sent. Being a soft consonant, it is always when movent pronounced with one of the soft vowels. Its full name is سین ممدله the undotted سین. It is also called سین معص the سین of the word معص (in the ایحد formula).

In chronograms and astronomical tables this letter has the numerical value of 60.

When the letter سین is followed by a letter ح, or a letter ه, care should be taken to give to each letter its full phonetic value; as سهیل se-hám. سهیل tós-híl, etc.

The سین is reduplicated in pronunciation instead of the ل of the Arabic definite article ال, when it follows this article as the initial of the noun; as, علی اشهر ‘álí’s-sháhar.

The letter سین, like ش, is often printed, and much more generally written in Turkish, without the serrations of its head.

Formerly many Turkish words were written with سین where س is now generally used. If a word beginning with سین be met with which is not found in its alphabetical place in this lexicon, it must be sought under the letter سین.

In Turkish, the only grammatical or derivative uses of the letter سین are to form, followed by a vowel letter ا or ی, and added to any adjective, a verb of feeling or deeming, and rarely, followed by a consonant ر, but preceded by a long vowel letter ی, an active future participle of duty or necessity. Thus, from یوك is formed the verb يوكيمك to deem large, great, or grand, from كك the participle ككبر who is to come, who ought to come.

In dates of letters and documents, the letter سین stands for ش, and indicates the month شعبان.
